Poland Frees 1,200; Pope's Visit Off

Jaruzelski, Archbishop Say Time Is Not Ripe for a Trip

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
VATICAN CTTY — Pope John Paul II has decided not to visit his homeland next month but hopes to go later when social conditions have improved. Archbishop Jozef Glemp, Roman Catholic primate of Poland, said Wednesday. The announcement was made as Poland's martial law chief, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, said that conditions are not yet right for the pope to attend the 600th anniversary of the Shrine of the Black Madonna of Czestochowa.

Gen. Jaruzelski said that the Polisb government has "adopted a positive attitude" toward a return papal visit "since the beginning." However, be said, there must be "appropriate conditions" for such a significant visit, including "peace in the country, a halt to all activity threatening to the security of the state, and achieving the necessary level of normalization."

He said that the authorities would do all in their power to make the visit possible "next year" before the Black Madonna jubilee celebrations end in September, 1983. Archbishop Glemp announced Wednesday that the celebrations would be extended until that date

Political sources said that the Polish government was not ready to accept all the church's conditions for the visit. These were understood to include the release of Lecb Walesa and the other interned members of Solidarity.

Earlier this month the Soviet press unleashed a barrage of criticism of the Polish church and of the pope's visit, suggesting that the trip was a ploy to whip up anti-Socialist feeling and undermine the political system.

Arcbbishop Glemp's announcement was made one day after the pope had held talks with the Polish foreign minister, Jozef Czyrek, who made a surprise visit to Rome. Polisb church sources said that the foreign minister had brought a proposal to the pope that the trip be postponed until next May.

John Paul has repeatedly expressed the desire to visit Poland for the celebrations marking the 600th anniversary of the arrival of the Black Madonna, a revered icon, at Czestocbowa, Poland's holies shrine and a symbol of Polish nationalism.

But there had been speculation for months that the pope would not go as long as martial law was in force, or that the Polish govern-ment would not permit the visit because it feared that the pope's presence would touch off nationwide anti-government demonstra-

In 1979, John Paul's first to Poland as pope sparked an emotional outpouring that was considered to be a factor in the nationwide upheaval that resulted the following year in the formation of Solidarity.

"When we thought about the Holy Father's visit this August we considered all the possibilities but also all the obstacles," Archbishop Glemp said in a homily during a Mass for Polish residents of Rome in the Polish chapel in the grottoes of St. Peter's Basilica.

"And the Holy Father himself, reflecting on the circumstances, has decided to postpone his trip to a later date within the jubilee year," he said.

"In fact, we do not want this trip to take place in a period of nervousness and excitement hut we want the visit of the head of the cburch and also our spiritual teacher to take place at a time when we will be able to welcome his every word, our common prayer with him in a religious spirit, without hesitation, without emotions dictated by external condi-

Olszowski Named Foreign Minister

ompiled by Our Staff From Dispatches WARSAW - Stefan Olszowski, veteran Polisb politician wbo resigned as Communist Party propaganda chief last week, was appointed foreign minister by parliament Wednesday.

Mr. Olszowski, wbo was foreign minister from 1971 to 1976, replaces Jozef Czyrek, who will retain responsibility for the foreign relations of Poland's ruling Communist Party. Both are members of the Polithuro, the party's top body.

Mr. Olszowski's appointment had been expected since he was dropped last week from the Communist Party secretariat in a major shake-up at a Central Committee meeting. Observers said the promotion effectively removed him from the party hierarchy, where his hard-line ideology was a challenge to Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski.

Conditions Set for Lifting Martial Law by Year's End By Dan Fisher

WARSAW — Poland's martial law authorities Wednesday ordered the release of more than 1,200 internees - about two-thirds of those still beld — and said it is the government's "intention" to lift martial law by the end of the

However, they also announced that martial law would be suspend-ed only if the country remains calm and parliament votes "special powers" that the government can use to forestall any new threats to the system.

More than 600 persons - in-More than 600 persons — including Lech Walesa and most of the other top leaders of the suspended Solidarity trade union movement — will remain under detention as political risks. Also, 4,000 to 6,000 union activists and sympathizers are either serving jail terms for political crimes or in prison awaiting summary trial on political charges.

The government announcements were made in separate speeches to the parliament by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, leader of the martial law regime, and Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski, and in a press conference by a government

All were timed to coincide with Wednesday's National Day celebrations, and they followed a carefully orchestrated campaign of leaks to the Western press over the past several weeks that suggested the government would take major steps toward healing the country's political wounds.

The reality, however, was far more modest. "It was a lot less than the performance that was being hinted at by the government," a Western diplomat commented. "It misses the point of social pressure — there's no amnesty, nothing that holds out any promise to people who are angry, frustrated or

The authorities' actions also fall far short of the conditions set by the Reagan administration and some other Western nations for lifting of economic sanctions imposed after the declaration of martial law in December. Those conditions include the lifting of martial law, release of all internees and a resumption of dialogue between the government and Solidarity. Gen. Jaruzelski told parliament that martial law remains necessary because of continuing activity of "the domestic and foreign opponent, and particularly the adminis-tration in Washington, which has permitted itself just a few days ago to make further gross attacks against Poland." This "opponent" distributes provocative propaganda, inspires street riots and threatens the country with a general strike, Gen. Jaruzelski said.

Later, Wieslaw Gornicki, a government spokesman, issued the martial law authorities' strongest attack yet on President Reagan personally. Mr. Gornicki said the president's remarks on Monday, marking the beginning of Captive Nations Week, were "insulting to Poland and the Polish nation and . substandard to civilized countries maintaining diplomatic ties."

Mr. Reagan referred to the imposition of martial law in Poland as a "bitter reminder that the quest freedom and self-determination can only be restrained by force," and said it "demonstrated the moral bankruptcy of a system which has been unable to earn the support of its population after more than 35 years in power."

Gen. Jaruzelski said that the rul-

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - After a week of heavy fighting, Iraq appears to have achieved a limited but important military victory in its war with Iran by blunting a ma-jor offensive and forcing a stand-off, according to U.S. officials. On Wednesday, Iraq said it re-pelled an Iranian air attack on Baghdad and shot down one of the raiding F-4 Phantom jets, The Associated Press reported Iran said its planes succeeded in bombing oil facilities in Baghdad.]

While cautioning that the evenmal outcome of the war remained in doubt, Reagan administration officials who have been monitoring the fighting said Tuesday that Iraq's successful defense of its territory had turned the momentum in its favor. -They said that Iranian setbacks in the field were likely to rekindle political dissent about the war in Tehran Some Iranian officials, induding Foreign Minister Ali-Akbar Velayan, initially opposed the invasion of Iraq for fear that it might lead to a costly, protracted battle for foreign territory of debatable strategic importance, according to U.S. State Department. fighting in southern Iraq that beended with an effective Iraqi coun-

Heavy but inconclusive fighting has continued in an area to the northeast of the Iraqi port of Bas-ra, American officials said. Basra is 14 miles (23 kilometers) from the border. Combat has been concentrated in that area since Iranian forces invaded last Tuesday.

U.S. officials noted that Iranian battle reports, which began with dramatic victory claims last week, have adopted a defensive tone. ### U.S. Raises Estimate of Soviet Arms Spending

Defense Intelligence Agency Also Foresees Growth in Oil Production

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Defense Intelligence Agency has estimated that the Soviet Union is spending more of its national wealth for military power than previously report-

The agency has also found that the production of some weapons has declined as Soviet military planners move to more advanced and more expensive weapons. A similar trend is under way in the United States.

The Defense Department's intelligence arm has also predicted that Soviet oil production will continue to rise slowly until 1985, level off for five years, and then resume its rise in the 1990s. This forecast is at odds with that of the CIA.

The defense agency's assessments were presented to the Joint Economic Committee of Congress on June 29 by the agency's direc-

His report was made public by Sen. William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin and a member of the committee.

The agency's assessment of Soviet military spending appeared to support a contention of the Reagan administration that the United States must increase military spending to deter the expansion of Soviet military power.

But the reported decline in weapons production has led staff specialists in Congress to suggest that a reversal in the Soviet buildup may have set in.

"We could be seeing a moderation in their defense production," an official said.

The prediction on Soviet oil production may affect U.S. military strategy in the oil-producing region around the Gulf. Some administration officials have said that they expect the Soviet Union to invade Iran within this decade because Soviet oil production will have begun dropping. In that event, U.S. strategy would be to threaten the Soviet Union with a direct military confrontation.

Growth Slowing

According to the agency, the Soviet Union was previously estimated to spend 12 to 14 percent of its national wealth for military purposes. A new calculation, based on recent prices in rubles, put it at 14

tor, Lt. Gen. James A. Williams. The agency said Soviet military spending in 1980, the latest year calculated, was $252 billion, com-pared with $168 billion in the United States.

Sen. Proxmire said in a statement that "the economic evidence needs to be watched closely to see whether Soviet defense spending rates go up or down in future years With Soviet economic growth slowing, more income has evidently been drained from consumers in the Soviet Union. But Gen. Williams told the Joint Economic Committee that "a continued upward trend in military spending is likely" as the military continues to take top priority. The report submitted by Gen. Williams showed sizable declines in the production of tanks and other armored vehicles, self-pronelled anti-aircraft artillery, transport planes, submarines and both large and small surface ships.

Officials of the agency said the decline in tank production was due to retooling to produce new modcls. Anti-aircraft artillery is being phased down as missiles replace guns. Fewer but larger transport planes are being turned out.

The officials said that a major indicator for a continued increase in Soviet military spending was a projection for machine tool production during the five-year plan that ends in 1985. Machine tools for civilian industries are set to rise by 34.8 percent over the 1980 level while those destined for military production are to 20 up by 43.4

Man Planned To Cut Wrists At the Palace Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

LONDON - An intruder who entered Queen Elizabeth II's bedroom on the morning of July 9 planned to slash his wrists in front of ber with a broken ashtray, a government-ordered police inquiry disclosed Wednesday. The British government announced a major shake-up in royal security. As the official report was published, Home Secretary William Whitelaw told a packed House of Commons that a new royal security unit has been established and a 24-hour police guard posted outside the queen's private apartment in Buckingham Palace.

Assistant Police Commissioner

John Dellow, who conducted the inquiry, said that although there were technical failures of security equipment, the basic reason the man was able to get into the queen's bedroom was "a series of failures" by incompetent police-men, including failure to respond quickly to an alarm the man activated in another room of the royal apartment. The police report said Michael

Mr. Fagan "claimed that he had not entered the palace with this in-tention [of slashing his wrists] but that it formed in his mind for the first time when he saw the ashtray," the report said.

Cigarette Decoy

It said that before police arrived in response to the queen's telephoned calls for help, the queen attracted the attention of a maid, and together they ushered Mr. Fagan into a nearhy pantry on the pretext of supplying him with a cigarette. They were joined there by a footman who had returned from exercising the queen's dogs, and "the footman helped to keep Mr. Fagan in the pantry by supplying him with cigarettes until first one and then another police officer arrived and removed him," the report said. The government has said Mr. Fagan will not be prosecuted for entering the palace and the queen's bedroom. He will stand trial on charges of stealing a half-hottle of wine during an earlier palace break-in, and for unrelated assault and car theft complaints. Mr. Whitelaw also announced that Britain's Security Commission will investigate the appointment and activities of the queen's former bodyguard, Cmdr. Michael Trestrail, who resigned this week after admitting be had had a lengthy affair with a male prostitute. Mr. Whitelaw said Cindr. Trestrail's confession raised further grave questions about the queen's security. He said the officer's homosexual association must have carried risks of blackmail, and it was criminally negligent that the authorities did not act on the disclosure as soon as it came to their

Hungary Feels The Heat in Beer Shortage

The Associated Press
BUDAPEST - A weeklong Central European heat wave has resulted in a beer shortage in Hungary, the country's Com-munist Party newspaper reported Tuesday.

Under a headline that read "It's hot and there isn't enough beer on the market," the paper Nepszabadsag said Hungarians were consuming more beer than ever before. The paper said that in cities across Hungary in the past week cases of beer were bought as quickly as they were placed on store shelves. According to the article, Hungary's per capita beer con-sumption was only 3.8 liters in 1938 but had risen to 88 liters last year, still well behind the 145 liters consumed by the average West German. A liter is about a quart.

Nepszahadsag said that al hough Hungary produces 800 million liters of beer a year, 160 million liters are imported. The paper said that to meet demand, production for the do-mestic market should be increased by 150 million liters.

Despite the increase in gold smuggling, the major trade re-mains in foreign goods, which are prized highly by Indians both for the status they offer and because Indian-made consumer products are not as well made as similar products from Japan or the industrialized West. Simple American safety razors and blades are valuable because the Indian ones are so shoddy. Similarly, Indian watches or radios are considered vastly inferior to Japanese products that cost less money elsewhere.

There is a strong feeling among Indians that products made here need heavy tariff protection because they could not compete if foreign goods were readily avail-able. Moreover, many products in made in India.

In fact, smuggled goods are of-ten only slightly more expensive on the streets than they would be in Western cities, generally be cause they come in from duty-free ports.

A Panasonic radio-tape recorder was offered on the street for $200, but the dealer quickly began dropping his price.

The Sony Walkman, the latest Indian status symbol, sells for only about $30 more than the Hong Kong price, and top brand vide cassette recorders, which would cost almost $9,000 with all the duty paid, can be bought from Bombay smugglers for about half that. The same set sells for about $1,600 in Dubai or Singapore,

Jailing of Peace Activists: A Soviet Dilemma

Moscow Welcomes Western Pacifists but Frowns on Homegrown Variety

By Dusko Doder

Moscow Rhetoric has rarely had so strange an encounter with reality as in last week a detention of two Soviet peace activists.

As the Kremlin officially welcomed the first group of international peace marchers permitted to hold demonstrations in Soviet cities, the two activists were given 15 days in jail to keep thent from making contact with the visitors.

The law men, held on a charge of hooliganism are members of a self-styled Committee for Peace and East-West Understanding. The other members of the recently formed commission were placed under police surveillanguage or ordered to be out of town by Wednes-day white the 300 international marchers, mostly Scandinavian women, were due to ar-rive in Moscow.

At the same time, the Russians turn quickly hostile in the face of foreign threats. This is an equally genuine impulse and is cultivated by the authorities to maintain the nation's war readiness. An average person is given to boast-ing that if attacked the country can land a "crushing blow" on the United States or anyone else threatening it.

The appearance last year of peace move-ments in the West and the vast publicity that the Soviet media continue to give to anti-war demonstrations around the world led predictably to similar moves here. In Planning of Guatemalan Coup 23 coup and subsequent develop-ments was provided primarily by a Guatemalan government official elose to the events and opposed to Gen. Rios Montt. The version was confirmed by some political lead-ers and a foreign diplomat.

According to official accounts, the small group of junior army and air force officers who deposed the government of Gen. Fernando Romeo Lucas García on March 23 seized a radio station and made a public call for Gen. Rios Montt to join them. The general was reported to have been in church at the time. As a result of statements by church elders and by the general, it has been widely accepted that this was the first knowledge that Gen. Rios Montt had of the coup.

But the Guatemalan official and a political leader said that on March 13, 10 days before the coup. Gen. Rios Montt attended a meeting with the young officers and senior political leaders of the ex-senior political leaders of the extreme right-wing National Liberation Movement. The purpose of the meeting, according to the official, was "to finish organizing the logistics" of the coup.

On the day of the coup, three successive juntas were formed, with Gen. Rios Montt being the only person included in all of them. The final junta, of which he was president, also included Gen. Horacio Maldonado Shaad and Col. Francisco Luis Gordillo.

"From the beginning." Gen.

"From the beginning," Gen. Maldonado and Col. Gordillo knew that they were not going to survive as junta members, "but not the hour and day" they would fall, the Guatemalan official said.

The end came June 9. What the official called a working breakfast had been scheduled for 7 a.m. But, he said, it was not a working breakfast at all, but a "goodbye ceremony," with heavily armed soldiers present to enforce the will of Gen. Rios Montt on his junta partners.

Gen. Rios Montt has said the two junta members voluntarily signed resignation papers. The official said, however, that there was nothing voluntary about the resignations and that the officers had refused to sign any documents.

According to the Guatemalan official, a senior military officer in the government called on Col. Gordillo on June 20 at his home, where he was under house arrest. He offered the colonel $50,000. Two days later, a civilian Cabinet minister came to ask if the colonel wanted the payment in dollars or in local currency.

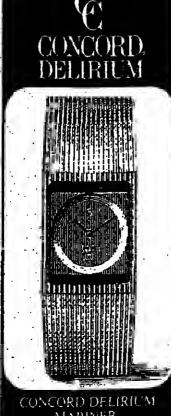

According to a diplomatic source, the same offer was made to Gen. Maldonado.

The Guatemalan official said Col. Gordillo had not accepted the money, and that he did not know what Gen. Maldonado had done.

There have been no indications that the United States participated in the planning or execution of the coup. But it has acted decisively to prevent at least one powerful fac-tion from deposing Gen. Rios Montt, according to a diplomat.

It is widely accepted that Gen. Rios Montt won the 1974 presidential election, but that the victory was taken away from him by his military peers in the National Liberation Movement. The diplomat said that the U.S.

ambassador, Frederic L. Chapin, acting on written instructions from the State Department, sternly warned the two top leaders of the National Liberation Movement that U.S. aid would be cut off if they participated in a coup that de-posed Gen. Rios Montt.

It Is the PLO's Move

From THE NEW YORK TIMES

There are serious people who say the PLO the United Nations resolutions that envision deserves in defeat what it failed to get in two decades of political and terrorist activity: American "recognition" and a guarantee of its own independent state. These people include humanitarians who are eager to avoid more loss of life in Beirut; Americans eager to punish Israel for its free use of American arms; and Arabs embarrassed at their own inability to help the PLO.

For whatever motive, they all would reward the biggest hijacking in history — half of Beirut is the hostage — in a coin they do not possess: the Israeli-held West Bank.

Negligent though he bas been in Middle East diplomacy, President Reagan is wisely having none of this.

The United States is indeed uniquely placed to pressure Israel for major concess.

placed to pressure Israel for major concessions to Palestinian nationalism. But even in the bunkers of Beirut it should be clear that such pressure will not work in Israel or serve American interests until the Arab beneficiaries of the pressure are ready to coexist with Israel and to promote pro-Western stability.

The PLO gambled on terrorism, radicalism, Soviet arms and influence, and it has lost. It lost not only to Israeli and American weapons but to self-preservationist diploma-cy by Egypt. Saudi Arabia, Jordan, even Syria. Washington would be foolish, and in no way helping its conservative Arab friends, to honor the PLO's chits at this late stage.

coexistence and negotiation with Israel. They are redeemable even by Palestinians of filiated with the PLO, but only those who accept Israel and, in Secretary Shultz's phrase, "get off this guerrilla kick." Those Palestinians deserve the most vigor ous American support in resisting Israel's annexation of the West Bank and realizing Camp David's promise of full autonomy there. They will surely have it now that the Reagan administration understands bow much its passivity in the autonomy debate has contributed to the Lebanon bloodshed. An evolving homeland in the West Bank may not have much appeal to Yasser Arafat and his Beirut remnant. It certainly does not satisfy their "conditions" for admitting de-feat in Lebanon. The civilians they are using for cover are Moslem innocents; the PLO's final bet is on Israel's humanity and the sen-sibilities of civilized nations.

They deserve only one answer: Respect your enemy's restraint and willingness to ne-gotiate even indirectly. As the Saudi foreign minister correctly concluded in leaving the White House on Tuesday, the only things negotiable in Beirut are the arrangements for Arafat's departure and a corresponding Israeli pullback. Only then will the Arab League be free to try forming a new Beirut government, and only its strength will determine how quickly Israel can be pressed to

Thatcher and the IRA

From THE NEW YORK TIMES

The male Argentine junta underestimated the political grit of Margaret Thatcher. Ditto Britain's railway men, who have now abandoned an impulsive strike after she warned they would be fired. Now comes the Irish Republican Army, which callously claims responsibility for the bloody bomb attacks in London on Tuesday. To defeat this gang would assure the prime minister a worthy place in history. Can she pull it of?

A year ago Mrs. Thatcher humbled the fRA by facing down the hunger strike of imprisoned guerrillas demanding political sta-tus. The sequel was important. She named one of her leading critics, James Prior, to the sensitive post of secretary of state for North-ern Ireland. The activist Prior has come up with a new scheme for electing a 78-member assembly in the embattled province.

His "April proposals" are meant to bring Catholics and Protestants together in an elected provincial government. For nearly a decade no one has been able to agree on how Northern Ireland should be governed. Prior's plan is faulted by the Protestants for yielding too much to the Catbolie minority, whose leaders make precisely the opposite objec-tion. In Dublin, Premier Charles Haughey is also unhappy. If any of the above were to say they liked the scheme, that would doom it. History argues against optimism, as Ameri-can viewers of a fine public television series on Ireland bave just been reminded. But Secretary Prior is by nature a risk-taker, and he has Mrs. Thateber's backing. And the moment may be right for a fresh try.

After a lull in killings, the IRA obviously wants to show that its voice has to be beard. But it is a voice of savagery, calculated to catch headlines now that the Falklands fighting is over. Mrs. Thatcher's task is twofold: to hunt down the perpetrators, and to drain the grievances that cause law-abiding people to protect IRA murderers.

Other Editorial Opinion

After the London Bombs

The horrific carnage shames us all. It brings shame not only on the twisted evil minds which planned [Tuesday's] outrage and on those subhuman murderers who carried out the plan, it brings shame also on every Irish man and Irish woman.

- The Irish Press (Dublin).

Once more we were all confronted by the maniacal face of terrorism, carried out, we are told, with the aim of securing the reunifi-cation of this country. This morning an opinion poll here would prove most emphatically such barbaric acts against human beings.

— The Irish Independent (Dublin).

No deaths in Britian through bombing advance the Irish cause one bit. Dead British soldiers in a bandstand, dead passers-by like murdered milkmen and lorry drivers in the border counties of Northern Ireland represent a perversion of Ireland's desire for unity and a new deal with Britain. The vision of the people of Ireland of future relations with the people of Britain is not covered with blood. - The Irish Times (Dublin).

The IRA and America

[Nine] people died in London and a score were injured in the delivery of a message which was probably not directed principally at the British government or people at all. [Northern Ireland Secretary] James Prior is in Washington talking to the United States government, and the bloodshed is an affirmation to the IRA's American supporters that the cause of violent republicanism is not dead yet. The United States is still a vital source of IRA funds, as it has been for a century — and the source of as much as half its weaponry, according to intelligence estimates. The constituency there needs to be nourisbed, by this and other means.

- The Times (London).

Mingled with the anger must be sympathy for the suffering of innocent bystanders, believed to have included American tourists. But perhaps from their suffering some good might come. Some Americans will go home and tell their tales of indiscriminate bombing. Will the IRA really be so successful after this at blinding gullible Americans with Celtic mists and rattling collection boxes? - The Daily Mail (London).

No to Those Sanctions

Historical precedent does not support the idea that economic leverage alone can prevent aggression or fundamentally change the conduct of errant nations. A former British foreign service officer, Robin Renwick, makes [the point] in a book just published by the Center for International Affairs at Hanvard. The findings are relevant to the brewing controversy in the Reagan administration as to whether economic warfare is a desirable strategy against the Soviet Union.

[There is a] notion, popular in some reaches of the Pentagon, that the Soviet Union's capacity for mischief could be severely eurtailed through a determined application of economic sanctions. President Reagan, in some of his public utterances, has seemed to share that view. [But] as Renwick observed in his bistorical survey of sanctions, trade and credit restraints did not prevent Mussolini's armies from conquering Ethiopia in the 1930s; oor has the U.S. embargo on trade with Cuba dissuaded Fidel Castro from sending Cuban troops to Africa.

There is no reason for America or its allies to allow the export of technology that can be of direct help to the Soviet military effort, nor should free nations be in the business of helping the Soviets with low-interest loans. But the angry European reaction to Reagan's attempt to stop the Siberia-to-Europe pipeline has demonstrated that there is no earthly chance that the allies would go along with a sweeping set of sanctions aimed at forcing the Soviet Union to reduce military spending.

Without such cooperation, go-it-alone American embargoes simply will not work. Even if that were not the case, the American people themselves would not support policies that, by their nature, would create a confrontationist atmosphere of an intensity that would be inappropriate in the nuclear era. - The Los Angeles Times.

NEW YORK - Since the Windsor Trust Co. of America suffered financial losses through the simultaneous disappearance of an employee and a suitcase on the closing day of the week, suitcases are as welcome in the downtown financial houses as a report of a typhus fever outhreak in July. In the money district bank clerks, cashiers and paying tellers have been jokingly commenting on the situation. "Formerly when we brought our satchels to the office on Saturday morning. before leaving in the afternoon to spend Sun-day in the country, nobody thought anything about it. But now it is clear that certain suitcases have altered circumstances," remarked a clerk of a leading trust company.

WASHINGTON — The first relief measure in the history of the United States to aid unemployment and distress, by placing $2.1 billion at the disposal of the government for loans for construction work that will provide work for 2,37 million men for one year, has been signed by President Hoover. The measure provides: 1) $300 million for direct aid to states in emergencies, to be distributed at the president's discretion; 21 a bond issue of S322 million for a federal public works program: 3] increase in capitalization of the Reconstruction Finance Corp. by $1.5 billion; 4) authorization of the RFC to make loans, for self-liquidating construction projects, to states and industries.

Rusk on Responsibility

By Dean Rusk

The writer was secretary of state from 1961 to 1969. This is the second of two articles.

WASHINGTON — A new secretary of state W soon discovers the sheer mass of commu-nications with other governments. On any work-ing day approximately 3,000 cables, all bearing the signature of the secretary, will go out of the Department of State to U.S. posts and to governments all over the world.

OI these, the secretary may see eight to 10 and the president may see one or two before they are dispatched. The remainder are taken care of by hundreds of officers who must necessarily have the authority to proceed with the day's work. It is the secretary's job to see that these professional officers understand the policies that a president and a secretary wish them to follow.

Of the more than 2 million cables that went out under my name during the 1960s. I can recall only four or five that had to be called back and rewritten because the authors had missed the point of policy that the president or I expected them to follow — an extraordinary professional performance by colleagues.

White House Staff

The secretary of state is the one who holds press conferences at home and abroad: it is he and America's ambassadors, to whom he fur-nishes guidance, who are the principal U.S. spokesmen with other governments; he must see that the interests and attitudes of other departments and agencies of the government are taken fully into account; he is responsible for seeing to it that U.S. delegations to international conference of the conference ences (about a dozen on every working day some-where in the world) are assembled and provided with credentials and instructions with regard to U.S. policy. More than any other person in gov-ernment, the secretary of state shares the awesome constitutional and public responsibilities of the president in foreign affairs and must be rec-ognized at home and abroad as one who has the full confidence of the president.

It needs to be said very simply that members of the White House staff do not and cannot share these responsibilities. Their job is to assist the president, not to substitute for him.

It is one thing for a member of the White House staff to transmit to a Cabinet officer an instruction from the president; it is quite another for such a staff officer to try to issue his own directives to major departments of government. If the president himself is not speaking, it is the secretary of state who, by statute, long-established custom and common sense, must speak for the United States in matters of foreign policy. If a president tries to inject White House staff into the chain of command with respect to the Cabinet departments, he is asking for a lot of trouble.

At the risk of seeming self-serving, I would suggest that one can search the news media of the 1960s and find a minimum of gossip about fends among those at the top levels of government. Sec-retary of Defense Robert McNamara, National Security Adviser McGeorge Bundy (later Walt Rostow) and I spent a great deal of time talking things over with each other, in discussions that were infused with the thought that we were all trying to serve the same president.

We were fully aware of the fact that honest men and women can have honest differences of wirey about complex problems in a turnulturus. when and women can have nonest differences of view about complex problems in a tumultuous and contradictory world. We did not translate those differences of view into consideration of personal prestlge, competition or the protection of one's own pad, or consideration of personal ambition. Guerrilla war among those at the top ambtion. Guerrilla war among those at the top of the government is simply too dangerous in the kind of world in which we live.

If a president finds anyone in his administration who is going around town plunging knives into the backs of his colleagues, that person should be fired immediately. Such activity becomes readily known because, among other things reporters do not protect their sources. things, reporters do not protect their sources nearly as much as they pretend.

The Pipeline

Any new administration must make the some-times difficult transition from campaign rhetoric to the responsibilities of office in the real world. Political campaigns and party platforms exist in the world of opinion; their primary purpose is to solicit votes. The generalities of campaign oratory and party platforms simply do not deal with real problems in the real world, which have dozens and dozens of secondary and tertiary questions surrounding them. Those who carry public responsibilities live in the world of decisions — a wastly different world from the world of opinion. vastly different world from the world of opinion.

A case in point bas to do with the administra-tion's attitude toward the contemplated gas pipe-line from the Soviet Union to Western Europe.

The point is not really whether such a pipeline is right; opinions may differ on that, and it is entirely appropriate for the administration to make its concerns known to America's friends in Europe. However, no one has appointed the president and the secretary of defense to be the den mothers of Western Europe mothers of Western Europe.

European leaders are grown men and women.

— many with far more experience in world afmany with far more experience in world at-fairs than America's leaders — who are entirely capable of assessing their national interests and the requirements of their national security. It is destructive to North Atlantic relationships for the United States to try to reach out and impose its own law and policy upon American-owned subsidiaries that are organized under the laws and policies of their host countries in Europe. Friends in Europe are allies, not satellites.

It was encouraging to bear Shultz underline the importance of continuity in foreign policy and his determination to seek a broad-based, bipartisan approach toward the rest of the world America is too large, powerful, rich and influen-tial to dart about like a bummingbird to sniff at each alluring hlossom; it must be reasonably pre-dictable for friends and adversaries alike, or it can inject disarray into an already troubled planet. Unanimity is not possible, but a broad consensus is there for those who are willing to participate in building it.

An Economic Foreign Policy Requires Allies

By Robert J. Samuelson

WASHINGTON — Foreign poli-cy in the traditional sense is increasingly irrelevant in describing nations relations with each other. The rights and wrongs of the debate, of which there are plenty on both sides, are less important than the sort of world they reflect. The traditional ideological and strategie orientation of foreign policy has given way before economic interests. Even now, farmers in the United States desperately want to increase trade with the Soviets, International banks, multinational companies and global traders now effectively create their own foreign policies.

Poland is a case in point, During the latter half of the 1970s, Western banks busily conducted an independent foreign policy with Poland by ex-

U.S. efforts to cope with these changes have foundered on a basic contradiction. Since World War II America has supported an open trading system divorcing commercial dealings from political considera-tions. But it has used economic sanctions against its adversaries.

flagrant abuse of a serious study."

The Census study concerned a technical issue: How do the Soviets value their trade? Because the Soviets set prices administratively, the real value of trade is a bookkeeper's fiction. With import prices set artificially high, import dependence is appar-ently high. In fact, the report (but not the press release) also shows that dependence is only 10 percent when world market prices are used.

port dependence in particular sectors. "Clearly, there's only one sector where the Soviets are vulnerable where the Soviets are vulnerable—grain," said Vanons. The Soviets now import roughly one-fourth of their grain needs. But the partial U.S. embargo after the invasion of Afghanistan failed. In an open world economy, the Soviets simply shifted to other suppliers, notably Argentina.

The present pipeline sanctions re-flect Reagan's frustration with this state of affairs. He wants to prevent the Soviets from getting critical tur-bine rotor blades for their pumping stations. What infuriates the Euro-peans is the U.S. assumption of control over their companies. The reac-tion is understandable. Imagine tion is understandable. Imagine American outrage if Helmut Schmidt ordered U.S.-based firms to stop producing German-licensed technology. Not even administration officials believe Reagan's orders inevitably doom the pipeline. The Soviets could use their own smaller pumps or bny other Western models. ed States. There may be instances can be called a community, given its when economie sanctions or other diplomatic sanctions are needed, but the United States may be destroying the political bases for making them effective. To understand why, recall the Iranian sanctions. It is no secret that the British disliked the order that froze Iranian deposits in the London branches of U.S. banks. The British did oot accept its legality and feared that the freeze could hurt London's future as a financial center. But they overlooked these objections, and the fact that the sanctions worked at all owes a great deal to their cooperation.

America faces inevitable frustra-tions in a world of fragmented power. But the moral of the Iranian sanctions is that the slim chances of coherent policy depend on the coop-eration of major allies. That kind of cooperation can be won only by persuasion and good will The administration seems to have abandoned the former and squandered the latter. National Journal.

Begin Puts U.S. Prop In Danger By Stanley Karnow

WASHINGTON — Nothing is more vital to Israel's survival than American support. Not just expressions of admiration or sympathy. but solid support that can translate into money and military equipment. For Israel owes its creation to the United States. And despite its own remarkable achievements, its existence over the past generation would have been impossible without beavy doses of American assistance.

But there is a growing danger that the rising antipathy in America toward Prime Minister Menachem Begin's belligerence could eventually poison U.S. attitudes toward Israel and thus jeopardize its future.

This trend was visible before Begin's decision to invade Lebanon. Within recent weeks, however, it has been accelerated by newspaper ac-counts and television scenes dramatizing Israeli aggressiveness toward innocent civilians. An important distinction marks the picture. Surveys consistently show that a majority of Americans believe that the United States must remain committed to Israel. An increasing proportion, though, have become critical of Begin.

A CBS poll last month indicated that twice as many Americans en-dorsed the "strongest" support for Is-rael as are prepared to acquiesce to Arab demands. But, according to the same study, more Americans rebuked rather than backed Israel for its in-tervention in Lebanon.

The difference was close, and Israel cannot afford a narrow margin. Americans' views can shift rapidly.

Professor William C. Adams of George Washington University underlined this phenomenon not long ago in the magazine Public Opinion, emphasizing that Americans have ceased to regard the Arabs as a "monolithic foe" and the Israelis as "the cruebby visitations." "thoroughly virtuous."

A key turning point, Adams noted, was Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's spectacular voyage to Jerusalem in 1977, Within three years of that, a Harris study concluded, Sadat was more popular in America than the president of the United States. While Americans' approval of Egypt soared in those years, support for Israel held firm, However, trust in Begin declined sharply. This suggests that Americans do not identify Israel with its leadership.

Meanwhile, the opinion surveys show, Americans have refined their perceptions of the Middle East — a contrast from the days when their stereotyped vision was of a region polarized between Israel and the Arab "bloc." Americans now count the moderate Arab nations like Saudia Arabia and Jordan as friends. Another important switch, especially important at the moment, has been the steadily rising concern among Americans for the Palestini-ans. The PLO and its chairman, Yasser Arafat, may not have won hearts and minds in the United States, but a growing percentage of Americans subscribe to the thesis that the Palestinians deserve a homeland as much as do the Jews.

The most significant trend may be the change that has occurred in the American Jewish community splits and controversies. Time was when few American Jews would dare to voice misgivings about Israeli policies. Now dissent is mounting.

It is still limited in its most vocal form to intellectuals, such as novelists Saul Bellow and E.L. Doctorow, but elite attitudes tend to trickle dowo. The dissidence is probably more widespread among U.S. Jews than Begin would like to admit. And it is not only confined to the United States: In Paris the other day, two retired presidents of the World Jewish Congress, Nahum Goldmann and Philip Klutznik, joined with former French Premier Pierre Mendès-France to condemn Begin.

These realities are difficult to swallow for anyone dedicated to Israel's security — as all Americans, Jewish or not, should be. The evidence is overwhelmingly clear, however, that Begin is isolating Israel from its most crucial source of support, and threatening its very existence in the process.

The Peronists, Argentina's largest party, are even more deeply divided, with about a dozen factions. Members have ranged from the extreme leftists who assassinated policemen in the mid-1970s to the extreme rightists who assassinated the leftists.

The party's titular head, former President Isabel Perón, is in exile in Spain.

Party leaders argue that recurring military coups have prevented a firm grounding in democracy. The promise of democracy, however, has lured many Argentines, particularly young ones such as those at Friday's rally, to try again.

Latest in Video Chic: 'Earth Stations'

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — Two years

WV ago out in Arcadia, Okla, Rick Schneringer flicked on his television, fiddled with the dial and flopped down on the couch. It was late afternoon in Arcadia, midnight in Moscow and 8 a.m. in Vladivostok, and "Good Morning, Siberia" was on the air, live via sat-

"It was the darndest show," said Schneringer. "With a little manip-ulation I'd been getting the Mos-cow Olympics all week, and then this show came on. I flipped my wig. Strange show. They spent a lot of time on it trying to show how American spies keep secrets in their boots or under their Schneringer, president of Satel-lite TV Technology, a company "dedicated to the promotion of home satellite receivers," pulled in the Soviet morning programming with a concave dish connected to his home television. Until recently the idea of hooking up a satellite receiver, or "earth station," for personal use had been, if not wholly fantastic, at least fantastically expensive; Neiman-Marcus featured a Comsat earth station for $36,000 in its 1979 catalog. But the price is dropping and the idea is catching on.

Larry Holmes has one. So do Rich Little, Barry Goldwater, Randolph Hearst Jr. and the offices of the U.S. House of Representatives. Corporations such as Avon and Ford, and Eskimos from Newfoundland to Greenland all use satellite receivers for electronically coordinated meetings, or teleconferences. Ted Turner gave Daniel Schort an earth station for his back yard two years ago. "I may have been the first persoo in the Washington area to have one," said Schorr, senior Washingtoo correspondent for the Turner-owned Cable News Network, "Turner asked me how my kids were going to be able to see me on television since there isn't any cable in Washington. So he gave me the dish. It was a gift." If you don't happen to have a 5 boss as generous as Ted Turner and you want to own the latest in video chic, a satellite dish is still a considerable investment. "If you want to spend around $12,000 you can get a unit with all the bells and whistles," said Schneringer. "But you can get a perfectly adequate system for around $3,000 to $5,000. You can also buy a kit for

$2,000 and build one yourself." An earth station has three compooents: a satellite dish, a lownoise amplifier (LNA) and a receiver. The dish is generally 10 to 12 feet (about three and a half meters) in diameter. It must be set on a sturdy foundation, generally con-crete, and must not be blocked by overhanging roofs or trees. Since the signal transmitted from satellites can be weak or distorted, the LNA is necessary to amplify the signal and improve reception. The receiver looks like the channel tuner on an ordinary television set and basically does the same thing — except the satellite can pull in 50 to 60 channels, with more to

One popular miscooception is that with a satellite dish a viewer can pull in just about any signal from any satellite.

That isn't true. While the heavens grow more crowded with satellites every day, only a few are designed for television transmissions. The range of a satellite is called its "footprint," and an earth station owner can sit down to broadcasts of British oews or French theater only if that show has first been beamed to a European satellite and then to one of the satellites that has the appropriate "footprint." When the earth station is initially installed, it is aimed toward ooe of the main satellites; in order to redirect the angle of the satellite dish, it must be adjusted by hand or by a system attached to the television.

Without breaking the law, an earth station owner can listen in on most cable stations free of charge. Schneringer claims that, whenever anyone tries to pay cable TV companies for listening in, the checks are mailed back. Not that the cable companies are happy with the situation; some, like Home Box Office, have announced multimillion-dollar plans to scramble their signals.

Many in the satellite industry say that the new technology is designed above all for people in remote areas of the United States, where reception is poor or nonexis-"There are 3 million homes out there that can't get more than a comple of stations and a lot who get just about nothing," said Schneringer, "I just had a forest ranger out in Idaho tell me that there's more snow on his TV than there is on the ground in January."

While large earth stations re-quire a sizable bank account and suitable clearance — making such technology impossible for many city dwellers - it is possible to buy a dish that is only two to three > in satellite technology.

> The Federal Communications Commission recently confirmed the legality of still-to-be-built direct broadcast satellites (DBS), issuing rules for broadcasting directly to bome sets. The decision could deeply affect the television industry, since DBS owners would be able to bypass cable subscriptioo companies and have more alternatives to the usual network offerings. The FCC also ruled that the new broadcasters will not be required to include community service programming. While the big

Early childhood nightmares are oow recognized as a natural response to a threatening experience in a child's life, said Dr. John E. 'Depressing Statistic'

Statistics show more that than a million Americans live in nursing homes or equivalent institutions. Most are over age 65.

"A more depressing statistic is that elderly patients institutionalized for longer than six months have little chance of being discharged," the report said, " it is for transfer to a bospital for the care of an acute illness."

Sabin said that most elderly patients who have been in such institutions more than three months were likely to have symptoms of dementia.

There are several important lessons from the study, the specialists said. The first is that doctors should use extreme care in diagnosing the elderly and remember that dementia and senility are often reflections of disease, not simply inevitable results of aging. Diagnosing dementia is difficult, even for specialists, they said.

Bad Reactions

Another lesson for elderly people as well as their doctors is the need for great caotion in the use of medicines. The aging brain becomes increasingly susceptible to bad reactions to tranquilizing, or ataractic, drugs, as well as to a-wide range of other potent medications used by the elderly, Mark

By Robert Pear

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The Department of Health and Human Services is considering changes in reg-ulations that would let it make maior revisions in the rules for Social Security, Medicaid, welfare and other programs without giving ad-

Department officials said that in most cases they would continue to use the "ootice and comment" procedures they bave been following for 12 years.

Means of Modification

But under the proposal, the department could choose to "omit the use of notice-and-comment procedures for rules relating to public property, loans, grants, ben-efits and contracts if, in its judgment," the delay had disadvantages that outweighed the benefits of public comment.

The "notice-and-comment procedures" that the proposal would modify are the means by which the proposal itself could take effect. The proposal was published last month in the Federal Register, the medium through which the government gives advance notice of changes in regulations. It is open to public comment until Aug. 23 and could then take effect after being published in its final form. Department officials said one of the major disadvantages of current

Itel Runs Into Slump as It Limps Out of Bankruptcy Proceedings

By Thomas J. Lucck

day in 1980, the headquarters suite of Itel Corp., high above San Francisco's imposing skyline, had taken on the atmosphere of a wake. James H. Maloon, who had become chairman of the equipment-leasing corporation six months earlier, set the tone at a news conference about the company's 1979 loss of $433.3 million.

"This is one of the great tragedies of the American corporate experience," he said. What followed three months later, when Itel filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act, seemed to justify Mr. Maloon's assess-ment. It was one of the largest bankruptcy proceed-

"They've clearly laid the groundwork to get out of bankriptcy, and they've done impressive work," said Sanford Rich, an analyst for First Investors Management Co., a New York firm that manages high-yield bonds and mutual funds and which holds about $3 million of bonds in a European subsidiary of Itel.

The company, baving disposed of its businesses in computer sales and leasing and other equipment-leasing ventures, now leases railroad freight cars and cargo shipping containers. It has struck agreements with creditors who hold $1.2 billion in debt. Most of the

In this year's first quarter, the most recent period for which figures are available, Itel said its net income was $6 million, compared with a loss of $600,000 a year earlier. But the company added that it would have had a loss if it had been paying interest on its debt. (Under hankruptcy protection, companies are not required to pay interest.)

Itel's revenue in the first quarter revenue fell 8 percent to $43.6 million.

Experts React With Caution

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
WASHINGTON — The government reported Wednesday that real gross national product grew at an annual rate of 1.7 percent in the second quarter. While the performance was stronger than expected, analysts said it does not necessarily signal the end of the recession.

"Temporarily we've reached bottom," said Lawrence Chime-rine, bead of Chase Econometrics, an economic forecasting firm. "But whether the recession really has ended depends on the future. It's a very small increase, a small in-crease from a very depressed level. Some sectors of the economy are still declining."

Even Reagan administration officials reacted cautiously. Com-merce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said recovery may come a few months later than the administration had predicted. At a press conference, he said real GNP in the current quarter probably will not rise at the 4-percent annual rate predicted by the White House earlier this year "unless we see a more rapid drop in interest rates."

But, he said, GNP could rise at a 4-percent rate in the fourth quar-

Murray Weidenbaum, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, called the GNP report the first sign of an expanding economy since mid-1981. "Clearly we have bottomed out of the recession, the economy bas turned up," he told the Senate Banking Committee.

Optimism about the economy had diminished in recent days. Last week, the government reported that retail sales declined 1.5 percent in June. Industrial production slipped 0.7 percent during the month. Many analysts said those reports showed that recovery from the recession had not begun.

On Tuesday, the Commerce Department reported a 0.5-percent decline in June's personal consumption spending. But the same report revised upward the department's earlier reports of April and May spending, estimating increas-es of 0.7 percent and 1.5 percent rather than 0.3 percent and 1.3

For example, while U.S. officials have predicted that consumers will lead the nation out of recession, Mr. Yardeni cites the same spending figures as evidence "more consistent with the view that the recession is not over and that consumers won't lead the nation out of the recession as long as interest rates are high."

Wednesday's report also said inflation — as measured by the broad-based GNP "price deflator" --- rose at a 5.3 percent annual rate in the second quarter after rising at an annual rate of 4.3 percent in the first quarter. The first quarter rate had been reported earlier at 3.8

One-Word Forecast

Private economists had predicted that the latest GNP figure would be slightly negative or slightly positive. E.F. Hutton Group's Edward Yardeni gave his forecast in one word: "Flat."

Contributing to the rise in real GNP — the total value of U.S. output of goods and services, adjusted for inflation - were an increase in personal consumption spending and a slowing in invento-ry reductions. Personal spending rose at a real annual rate of $7.2 hillion, up from $5.7 billion in the first quarter.

GNP fell at an annual rate of 5.3 percent in 1981's fourth quarter and 5,1 percent in the first quarter of 1982, the latest report

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed mixed Wednesday in very heavy trading as selling pressure near the .. close forced the market to give up most of the gains it acheived earlier in the day.

The Dow Jones industrial aver-

but first and fourth quarter GNP figures were revised to show greater drops than originally reported.

said he still believes stock prices are in a summer rally. He said the market recently has absorbed some heavy selling pressure very well. "The Dow Jones average has been in the 820 to 840 range for six days with hefty volume each day and has managed in hold its ground," Mr. Pado said.

But he added that some of the. technical factors in the market indicate that the rally does not have tremendous power behind it. He noted that the Dow Jones transporation average is in a pullhack phase and that it is often of precursor to other market indices. The transportation average fell 2.18 Wednesday to 316.32.

EEC Seeks Approval To Curb U.S. Exports

GENEVA - The European Economic Community, charging it has lost more than $2 billion in trade since 1972 due to unfair U.S. tax laws, Wednesday asked for international authorization to retaliate by raising tariffs on U.S. imports.

The Governing Council of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, under which international tariff levels are set, withheld a decision on the EEC request. It opted instead to recome discussion of the instead to resume discussion of the dispute at the next council meeting in October.

Briefing reporters on the private council meeting, GATT spokes-man John Croome quoted EEC trade delegate Roderick Abbott as saying the sum represented trade losses suffered up to last year by EEC companies through Washington's Domestic International Sales Corporation program. disclosed Tuesday, William R. Hinchman Jr., a 49-year-old executive vice president, was asked to resign. Mr. Hinchman, who moved last fall to the nationwide positioning group, a research operation that seeks opportunities for expansion, previously had been in charge of the institutional banking divi-sion, which dealt with both Drysdale and Penn Square.

Wayne G. Hansen, 51, a senior vice president, was also asked to resign. Mr. Hansen was head of correspondent banking within the

Richard J. Higgerson, 40, an executive vice president who had headed the institutional hanking. trade and export finance and secured-lending departments, was demoted and assigned to the na-tionwide positioning group. Mr. Higgerson, who had been described as a "rising star" within the bank, was one of Chase's 10 highest-ranking officers.

The resignations of three lowerranking officers were previously reported. Two of them were Richard Pinney, 40, a vice president in the correspondent banking divi-sion, and Margaret Sipperly, 27, a vice president who reported to Mr. Pinney. Both were involved in Chase's relations with Penn Square. Their resignations were tendered last week and accepted hy the bank Tuesday.

Drysdale apparently used the borrowed securities to speculate unsuccessfully in the money markeis. As a result, it was unable to meet about $285 million in interest payments owed to the owners of the securities. Chase agreed to make the pay-ments, although it contends that it

New Eurobond Flood Continues; Total for 3 Days Tops $1 Billion

LONDON — Spurred by declin-ing interest rates, the flood of new paper in the Eurobond market continued Wednesday, with the equivalent of more than $350 million in new bonds being issued.

But dealers said that the mar-ket's appetite for the new-issues began to fade somewhat Wednesday, as the total for the week climbed over the $1 billion mark Overall, Eurobond prices were aided by the fall in interest rates, they said. One-month Eurodollar rates dropped to 12.44 percent Wednesday from 12.94 percent Tuesday, and were sharply lower than the 1431 percent of last Wednesday. The average rise in bond puces was about 1/2 point. dealers said.

French Plan Is Criticized By Executive

PARIS - The former president of the Rhône-Poulenc chemical group Wednesday said be resigned because the Socialist government's nationalization of key industries is unrealistic and is driving them into heavy debt.

Mr. Le Floch-Prigent, 39, was former cabinet director of the Industry Ministry under Pierre Dreyfus, the ministry announced.

Industry Minister Jean-Pierre Chevenement announced Tuesday e bad accepted the resignation of Mr. Gandois, 54, who had headed Rhône-Poulene since June, 1979, after joining it in 1976.

He was only one of two compa-ny presidents retained after the nationalization of the chemical industry last February. In so doing, President François Mitterrand overrode protests from the Communist-led Confederation Generale de Travail, who blamed Mr. Gandois for previous layoffs at Rhône-Poulenc. "I am convinced that the [government's] policies contain too many contradictions to be realistie," Mr. Gandois said in his resignation letter, which be submitted to the Industry Ministry June 18. The government continues to announce objectives that will be impossible to achieve." He said Mr. Mitterrand's plan for increased investment spending to create new jobs for the 2 million unemployed will force companies into debt. Nationalized companies will not be able to play, on the eco-nomic and social front, the lead role that has been assigned to them, and that was the principle justification of their nationalizaCongressman Abandons Bid to Rein In AT&T the Bell System that are to be spun off by the parent company.

tablish a comprehensive national Ielecommunications policy.

Rep. Corcoran used parliamen-tary delays against the bill before the July 4 break and afterward helped to organize a torrent of amendments to the bill. Although most of them were defeated, they kept the bill tied up until Tuesday.

Rep. Corcoran said there was still a chance for a smaller, modified telecommunications bill this year - mostly along lines suggested by Mark S. Fowler, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission. Such a bill would include a provision clarifying the ju-risdiction over the spun-off Bell companies after the settlement is carried out. Another provision would give the FCC clear jurisdiction over long-distance service on an intrastate basis. Under present law, the commission regulates only interstate toll service.

Asked how legislation might still be salvaged, with Rep. Wirth having given up for this year, Rep. Corcoran said: "Tim is upset, but he'll get over it. If no one else does so, the publishers will come to him and say they still need legislation to protect themselves from compe-ution with AT&T, which will pro-

Rep. Corcoran was referring to key provision in the legislation that would have restricted AT&T. after the divestiture, from providing its own information services in competition with publishers and other private companies. The bill would have restricted Bell to a role of supplying communications links between customers and companies that supply information. In favor of the bill were several telephone companies that compete with AT&T, including GTE Corp. and Continental Telecom, as well as large users of telephone service and many state regulators of telephone service.

Lined up against the bill, besides AT&T, were the 600,000-member Communications Workers of America and MC1 Communications Corp., a company that pro-vides long-distance phone service. Sam Simon, director of the National Citizens Committee for Broadcasting, a public interest group, said of Rep. Wirth's action: This means, unfortunately, that the script for telecommunications policy will now be written by AT&T."

"The point was to rent the apartment fast...

"And I did. Just two days after my ad appeared." That's an actual quote from someone who recently offered an apartment for lease in the classified columns of the Herald Tribune. We receive testimonials like that all the time.

Perhaps because Herald Tribune readers are responsible and responsive people. Better off than most, better placed, better paid. And so in a better position to buy the things they see advertised in their favorite newspaper.

So if you want to rent an apartment or sell a car or hire a secretary... give us a try. You'll see...

Twice As Much Art for Your Money

If you purchased this Trib at a newsstand, you're already enjoying a rare bar-gain—the whole world in just a few tightly written, fact-packed pages. You're reading a product created by scores of journalists working day and night from dozens of distant datelines to bring you a compact compilation which can be purchased for the price of a cup of coffee.

But why not double the bargain? Enjoy twice as many newspapers with double the headlines, business trends, candid commentary, high fashion and comic strip hi-jinks, and Art Buchwald three times

By subscribing to the International Herald Tribune for six months or a year, you receive each copy at almost half the news-stand price. Up to 46% off, to be precise, depending on where you live. Twice as many Tribs for your money.

Subscribe now and we'll speed bargain-price Tribs to your home or office from our various simultaneous distribution points in Paris, London, Zurich and Hong Kong.

Join the global who's who of thoughtleader readers who turn to each morning's Trib for the latest in objectively reported world news, briskly written opinion, the sell reports from the international marketplace, at-the-stadium recaps of just-completed matches, what's happening in the world of culture—and all in an international perspective.

Double the value of the Trib by halving

ARNHEM, Netherlands

Akzo said Wednesday it plans to go ahead with a 600-million-guilder ($221 million) aramid fiber project in the northern Netherlands after agreement with the Dutch government on financing Economics Minister Jan Terlouw said in a letter to Parliament that the state will provide 300 million guilders for the project. The state-owned Noordelijke Ontwikk-clings will take a 50-percent stake in the 130-million-guilder share capital of a joint venture with Alizo's Enka. The state will also grant a 100-million-guilder subor-dinated loan through the Nation-ale Investeringsbank, while another 135 million guilders will be provided in the form of investment

Roy, an indifferent scholar at best, decides to volunteer at once for the Marines in order to escape the embarrassment of failing to graduate as scheduled. In his last weeks at home he falls in love with Shirley Colby, a beautiful and previously unattainable cheerleader, and she with him; when he comes home on leave after basic tensely physical, as a curious Artie discovers when he tracks them down at their favorite spooning spot. They become engaged, against the strenu-ous objections of Shirley's parents;

a song achingly familiar to anyone old enough to remember World War II: "Don't sit under the apple tree/With anyone else but me, Till I come marching home." The novel, his fourth, is a nostalgic recreation of what life was like on the small-town home front for a 17-year-old girl who desperately misses her fiance and for the young boy whose "duty" it is to guard her for his brother. It is a recol-ection of a time when the strains and dislocations of war forced boys and girls to grow up much faster than they ought to. In other words, the territory will be instantly recognizable to anyone who has read "Summer of '42" or

To his credit Wakefield declines to sentimentalize either the war or the home front. He recalls the "slacking" that took place as the war entered its third and fourth years and Americans found it increasingly difficult to maintain the vigilance and sacrifice that the national effort demanded. Though Roy serves heroically in the South Pacific, there is nothing heroic about the ultimate resolution of his wartime experience; that resolution is, in fact the most unexpectedly moving part of the novel. War is exhausting and decidents. the novel. War is exhausting and de-bilitating for all; as the conflict draws to a close. Artie bas grown up enough to understand that it is time to move

"In the secret, most selfish part of his mind, Artie was glad the A-bomb had ended the war because he was sick and tired of it. He knew he'd remember Pearl Harbor the rest of his ife, but it seemed now part of his childhood, along with the patriotic songs and the drives for Bonds and songs and the drives for Bonds and scrap, the rationing stamps and Gold Stars hung in the windows of homes where boys would not return. All that seemed like a dream already, and Artie was ready for the real things of life, like high school and girls."

As that paragraph suggests, the chief weakness of "Under the Apple Tree" is its uncertain narrative tone. At times Wakefield writes in the clumsy language and syntax of a pre-adolescent boy; at others, in the more distant and mature voice of the omniscient anthor. It's a problem that almost always vexes the novelist who chooses to write about a child but declines to let the child tell the story, and Wakefield fails to resolve it. On balance, though, "Under the Apple Tree" is a pleasant little book that is appealingly earnest and direct.

THE ANATOLIAN

By Elia Kazan. 436 pp. $15.95.

Knopf, 201 East 52nd St., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

THERE are moments, especially in the first half of "The Anatolian, when one cannot help thinking that with his sixth try at a novel. Elia Kazan, still better known as a film and theatrical director, has finally gotten the medium under control. There is, for one thing, the vigor and vividness of his characters - to mention but a few of them, the Anatolian himself; Stavros Topouzoglou, a Greek from Turkey who has worked a decade as a poorly paid salesman for a New York rug merchant in order to bring his family to the United States; Althea Perry, the beautiful Protestant girl from suburbia whom the ill-spoken Stavros is drawn to as his passkey to American culture, and old Fernand Sarrafian, the charming and mysteri-ous millionaire whom the arrogantly ambitious Stavros sees as his stepping-stone to wealth and power.

There is, for another thing, Kazan's uncanny ear for dialogue. This not only stamps his characters individually, but also helps to bring alive some of the more unusual scenes. Yet even at the best moments, there are subtle hints of technical problems to come. At first, Kazan's complete reliance on dialogue in certain scenes appears innocent enough. It seems at worst merely a manneristic and meaningless shift in narrative tone and at best a useful means of animation, because it forces us to visualize the action exclusively through what the characters are saying.

And at first, Kazan's tendency to lay things on a little thick isn't bothersome. Indeed, we take a certain satisfaction, albeit a shameful one, when in revenge for his mistreatment by her parents, Stavros takes Althea forcibly on her mother's bed while at the same time watching the dreadful woman putter in her garden.

But eventually these tendencies get out of control, and lead to a fatal loss of tone and proportion in the novel's most important scenes. In one of these, we are asked to believe that Stavros can listen to a retirement speech that is about to turn into an attempt on his life and at the same time welcome two compatriots who have just arrived from Greece with the news that one of Stavros' brothers has lost an arm in the guerrilla war against the Turks.

And at the novel's climax, we are offered an aborted wedding, in the wake of which Stavros gets involved in a fight with Fernand's chanffent. Fernand bites Stavros on the neck and nearly loses his dentures, the mother of the bride-to-have-been keeps blushing at the thought of biving seen Stavros cohabit with her daughter, one of the guests pretends to read the sonnets of Elizabeth Barrett Browning and the groom to have been drives his car into a tree and puts himself in the hospital, where evcryone is finally reconciled.

Drawing-room Farce

What has begun as an immigrant epic has diminished to drawing room farce, a cheerless echo of "You Can't Take It with You." Perhaps a canta could make sense of this chaotic activities. ity, but mere dialogue and a minimum of descriptive prose has not.

Also, certain questions remain teasingly unanswered. Who is responsible for Althea's pregnancy? Will Stavros succeed in his commercial invasion of the Middle East? Will the Greeks regain Anatolia from Turkey! Will the British prove reliable in supporting the invasion? Is money really the only key to power in America, or is Stavros too much a victim of hard knocks? And will Kazan learn to give his readers more credit for catching on to the obvious, or will he continue to play to the dullest groundling in his andience?

f have a feeling we are going to learn the answers to these questions. If "The Anatolian" is the sequel to Kazan's first novel, "America America," can the sequel to "The Anatolian" be far behind? Probably not. And considering the passion and vigor of this latest novel and the fact that for all its faults, it is still the author's most accomplished work to date out even looks forward with a modest degree of expectation to whatever is going to happen next.

Loyal Baseball Fans in Quad Cities -Keep Cheering Minor League Cubs

U.S. Women Sweep Opening Matches in Federation Cup

New York Times Service. PARIS - The last time he saw Paris, Alain Meslet's heart was neither young nor gay but troubled. He had just publicly confessed to throwing bicycle races and using illegal drugs. and then, on July 19 last year, there be was riding in the Tour de France, completing the traditional last laps oo the Champs-Elysées and finishing 41st overall in the world's major bicycle endurance race.

At the end of the afternoon, while hundreds. of thousands of Frenchmen were cheering Bernard Hinanit's victory, Meslet, then 31 years old retired. His six-year career as a professional ended on the broad and elegant avenue where he had known his only real glory: in 1977 he won the final stage in Paris, crossing the finish line with arms upraised and the sly smile of somebody who has surprised even himself.

The final day's winner is always eclipsed by the finish of the long haul and the ancinting of the overall champion; even the daily victory ceremony in which the stage winner is given a bouquet is usually overlooked as some French dignitary presents a Sèvres porcelain vase to the overall winner. So Meslet's victory was unsung, But it mattered to him.

"I used to make between 1,500 francs and 1,800 francs [then $300 to $350] in each of the criteriums," local races staged throughout the country day and night for weeks after the Tour de France. In 1977, I reached 2,500 france. which wasn't bad "

Money means a lot to Meslet. As a professional bicycle rider with four teams, he sometimes was willing to do anything to make moncy, as he admitted just before the Tour ended. And then he slipped away, opening a hicycle shop in his native Brittany, "turning a page," as Meslet will be back in Paris on Sunday when the 69th Tour de France completes its 2188-mile journey (about 3,500 kilometers) from rive by car, driving for Le Télégramme, a daily newspaper in Brest, a city in Brittany near his Brittany is big cycling territory, so Le Telegramme devotes pages every day to the race and sends along two reporters to cover its every moment. Meslet chanfleurs them, picking his way with horn and occasionally braking through the 140-odd riders remaining of the 169 who started in Basel. He shadows the pack from town to town - moving through the riders to reach advance observation posts or restaurants, staying at their heels while the reporters observe and make notes. When the riders reach the day's finish, the reporters scramble from the car and trust Meslet to park it, unpack and prepare it for the next day's chase.

Tour by car, not to mention up to half a dozen cars for officials, there is plenty of employment available for drivers. No special training is needed since job requirements exactly fit the average French motorist: disregard for speed limits, contempt for others on the road and heartfelt trost in immortality. Many of the drivers have been involved with the Tour de France before as riders and now sit behind the wheel as a way of staying in touch.

Jean-Claude Theillière, for example, was a professional racer for eight years and rode in the Tour four years as a teammate of Jacques Anquetil, five times a wirner of the race in the late 1950s and 1960s. Theillière, who now owns a driver for the press for the last three years.

Meslet revealed this, just before be retired, in an interview with the respected Noël Couedel in the French daily sports newspaper, L'Equipe, the primary sponsor of the Tour de France. The interview caused no stir because the next day Hinault won his third Tour de Erance and for works everyhody was discussing

Since then Meslet has dropped out of general sight. In Brittany he runs a small store - "I sell bicycles and sports clothes, my family has an apartment upstairs." His presence in this year's race seems to have caused no adverse comment. "f still have a lot of friends among the riders," be insists. "Nobody is nasty to me because of what I said." He got his chauffer's job, he says, when Le Télégramme phoned and invited him to work. "Of course I said yes. I like the Tour de France and meant it no harm. I said what had to be said, what I needed to say. "What you're saying," Couëdel asked him a to say it because young racers don't pay atten-

"You quit cycling happy?" Couëdel pressed.
"Oh yes, very. Without cycling, I would have wound up working in a factory."
Nobody bas publicly challenged what Meslet said, so it can be inferred that he spoke truthfully. He insists that he also spoke for many other riders, so it can be assumed that his remarks offer a low-level general insight into the world of professional bicycle racing.

Discussing the 1976 championships, Meslet said: "I was racing with [Guy] Sibille, who was smarter than me. He offered me a lot of money to let him win. I was starting to build a house and I was making 2,500 francs a month, so I was taking a big risk building a house. I accepted the offer of money." "I'm sorry to have sold out ... Instead of the [50,000 francs] I got, I could have made four times that by winning the championship, between the criteriums and a salary increase. I made a mistake." "Sibille got the best of you." Couedel said,

"but later you did the same to others." "Naturally," Meslet replied. "You have to be cold-blooded and not worry about making friends. I've sold races, but that happens often enough. Last year [1980], for example, I sold my services to anybody who wanted them. I was racing well on the Côte D'Azur and in the Tour of the Tarn but you've got to be a realist. Those are only second-rank races, I wasn't selling the Championship of France.

I wasn't winning enough and I needed money. Cycling is a nice way to make your living, but it can be deceiving. The sport I like is track and field. It's healthy, it's pleasant to watch and it hasn't been ruined by money.

Then Meslet turned to the use of drugs, a controversial subject in bicycle racing. During the professional season from Feburary to October, riders are exposed to wind, rain and even snow as they log up to 150 miles a day, often in the mountains. They feel tired and they get sick, and often they are treated with some of Riders are occasionally caught by urinalysis and then penalized — Angel Arroyo was stripped of his victory this year in the Tour of Spain, the Vuelta as it is called and Frie McKenzie of his victory in the Championship of Zurich.

"In 1976," Couëdel said, "you were aston-ished that nobody noticed you had gained a lot of weight during the Tour de France.

"That's right, t remember," Meslet answered "I trusted the way we were prepared for the race. But in the first stage, I finished in the last five. Something had gone wrong. That night I felt like my skin was cracking. I looked in the mirror and got scared. I was swelling up as I

"I know I was to blame, too, because I accepted all that stuff, including vitamin potions with the labels scratched off. I needed money, I was young, I was dazzled by good results.

"And then I understood that health was worth more than all that. In 1977 I took care of myself. It's better to be a minor racer than to burn up inside. Cortisone, there's the enemy. "What I've got to say is simply this: Pay attention in your health. Don't take cortisone, it stays in the body. All that saved me is that I was stupid for only a sbort time." At the end of the interview, Couëdel noted that "People are going to say that, in this interview, you and I give a bad impression of cycl-

"Perhaps," Meslet said. "But you have to understand that everything I've said, a lot of riders think but hesitate to say. I assure you that many riders think like me. But nobody talks about it. When they're asked, they tell lies. What I've said is the truth."

So Meslet continues to insist. "Nobody holds it against me," he said one morning this mooth, waiting for the race to start. "There were no reprisals after the interview and here I am, back with the Tour de France." The bicycle racers set off and Meslet excused himself. It was time to slip behind the wheel of the car and follo

The $236,000 Jackpot

The Life and Luck of Author Ved Mehta

By Richard F. Shepard

NEW YORK — Money may not be everything to a writer of serious works rarely destined for the top 10 and movie deals, but it certainly helps, as Ved Mehta says about his five-year award totaling $236,000 from the John D. Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation.

Mehta, a New Yorker magazine staff writer, has written more than a dozen books about his native India, his blindness, his fascination with Western philosophers and theologians and his extremely acute perceptions of places and people. He was one of 19 persons announced as the latest recipients of the foundation's no-strings fel-

'No Tenure'

"It makes me feel freer of fmancial pressure," the 48-year-old anthor said in his book-lined office at The New Yorker's headquarters. "I am still numbed by it. One has no tenure as a writer. You're as good as what you last wrote.

Twe been sitting in this little office from 10 a.m. until a quarter to 8 five days a week for 20 years, and I-work at bome on other days. I've been embarked on a project, a personal history. The third vol-ume, 'Vedi' — that's my first name, familiarly — will be pub-lisbed by Oxford Press in September, and I'm already well into the fourth. The advance on 'Vedi' was $2,500, and it took me three years to write the book."

Mebta, a trim and energetic man who has lived in the United States since the age of 15, except for several years of postgraduate work at Oxford, was not crying poverty but rather spelling out, as a careful writer does, what the award will mean to him. He emphasized that in some years be bad made more than $70,000 but in others perhaps less than $10,000. He is scholarly and journalistic and, above a man who thinks things out. He is blind, yet he describes with scrupulous detail appearances of rooms, countryside, faces, attire. He has said that this talent is inexplicable, that he does not understand all the mechanisms involved, and he dismisses the theories formulated by others to explain it.

William Shawn, editor of The New Yorker, who invited Mehta to join the staff in 1961, spoke of the qualities he discerned in him as an "Ved Mehta has established himself as one of the magazine's most imposing figures. His literary qualities are his own. Where there were oo forms to accommodate what he wanted to say, he created new forms, and his prose style airy, elegant, marvelously clear is his signature. He writes about serious matters without solemnity. about scholarly matters without pedantry, about abstruse matters without obscurity."

10 More in His Head

More often than not, Mehta's writes about his homeland, his home and himself, with both an emotional bond and an intellectual objectivity. At age 23, an autobiographical study, "Face to Face," was published, and be went on to themes have become central to him as a writer, and this is where the MacArthur fellowship will lend a beneficent hand.
